THE STATE DINNER.

The State dinner given Thursday night by the President and Mrs. Cleveland in honor of the diplomatic corps marked an epoch in such entertainments. The decorations were more elaborate than upon any previous occasion, with the single notable exception of the President's marriage day but arrangements for seating guests were something so entirely out of the usual line as to render the dinner, on that account, a most notable one. For the first time on record, the state dining room was not used. The brilliantly appareled diplomats and the guests asked to meet them were seated under an avenue of palms, and dined in the inner corridor, down which heretofore all guests at state dinners have walked to greet the President before the announcement was made for the dinner in the state dining-room. The effect of the pal-lined corridor, with the long table running the entire length, with its gorgeous settings, the wall festoon-ed with smilax and a brillant flood of light pouring down from every direc-tion, was gorgeous beyond description. To this effect was added the magnificence of the court costumes and the unrivaled display of flashing jewels and gay sashes on the ambasadors and ministers plenipotentiary.

In the East Room the President and Mrs. Cleveland received their guests in surroundings that had the effect of a vast bower of green. To the usual elaborate massing of palms in the win-dow, recesses and corners, and banking of the mantels with scarlet and white blossoms, the entire ceiling was festooned with garlands of ropes and smilax. These radiated from the three crystal chandeliers, and extended to every portion of the ceiling, clustering in garland effects about the circular electric lights. The pillars were twined with smilax, and the spaces above each doorway were filled in with a splendid array of small palms and foliage plants. As the setting of the table in the corridor, instead of in the State dining-room, necessitated a dif-ferent arrangement of the manner of entrance of the guests at the dinner, the business portion of the White House was utilized in solution of the difficulty, and elaborately decorated. The diplomats, after entering, were shown at once to the elevator, and, after laying aside their wraps in one of the private rooms on the second floor, passed down the length of the corridor to the doorway leading to the official portion of the mansion, and so down the public stairway, which was lined with ferns and tall, growing plants. The window re-cess at the foot of the stairway was entirely filled in with palms, about the base of which were foliage plants

The upper corridor was also lined with The dinner was further remarkable from the fact that never before has so large a number of guests been enter-tained at one time in the White House. The immensely long table was set for sixty-six guests, three sitting at each end. The President occupied his usual place on the north side of the table, im-mediately facing the Blue Room, direct-ly in front of which was the place at which Mrs. Cleveland presided. In the Blue Room the decorations were ertirely in green and white. The seating of the Chinese and Japanese ministers at the table was a matter in which general interest was felt, as all society is aware that the social relations of the two dignitaries are decidedly strained at present. Accordingly, at the expenditure of considerable gray matter on the part of those in charge, it was finally settled to have the Chinese minister on one side of the table, and opposite, at a safe distance, was seated the minister from Japan. Mrs. Cleveland wore a gown of white velvet mingled with silver. In her hair she wore a double string of solitaires. Carlton Cornwell, foreman of the Ga-URING the months of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy should
